With the blessings of His Eminence Archbishop Demetrios of America, Exarch of the Ecumenical Patriarchate, on September 9, 2012, a delegation of Archons of the Order of St. Andrew arrived in Berlin, Germany, the site of the Second International Archon Religious Freedom Conference. That conference will occur during the first week of December 2013 and its theme will be “Tearing Down Walls.” The purpose of the visit was to do advance work for the upcoming conference, including meeting with local religious leaders, politicians, diplomats and journalists and inspecting possible meeting venues. The delegation, pictured right, consisted of National Commander, Dr. Anthony J. Limberakis, Conference Planning Chairman, George C. Rockas, Regional Commander and Conference Planning Co-chairman, Judge B. Theodore Bozonelis and Spiritual Advisor to the Order, Father Alexander Karloutsos. They were assisted by Father Emmanuel Sfiatkos, Archmandrite of the Ecumenical Patriarchate, Rector in Berlin. Thereafter, on September 12, 2012 the delegation left Berlin and traveled to Istanbul and Ankara for meetings with Turkish Government officials, diplomats and minority community members. While in Istanbul they paid their respects to His All-Holiness, Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew and attended divine liturgy on the day of the Exaltation of Holy Cross at the Patriarchal Cathedral of St. George.

Shortly after landing in Berlin on Sunday morning, September 9, 2012, the Archon delegation hit the ground running and set the pace for the ensuing week-long Religious Freedom Mission. They visited 11 hotels investigating potential conference venues and meeting rooms. On their first full day in Berlin, Monday September 10, the delegation met with two journalists – Jorg Law, Editor of Die Zeit and Karen Krüger, Editor of Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung. Both reporters have a particular interest in religious freedom and both are well aware of the issues facing the Greek Orthodox community and other minority communities in Turkey. They each promised to work with the Order in developing the conference program and covering the conference in their respective publications.
On the political front, the delegation met with Cem Özdemir, co-chairman of the German Political Party Alliance ’90/The Greens, and a member of the German Parliament. Mr. Özdemir is not only a leading political figure in Germany but also a member of Germany’s Turkish community, which numbers approximately four million people and is the largest such community outside of Turkey. He is a strong supporter of the Ecumenical Patriarchate and has often publicly expressed this support. During the meeting, he told the delegation that it is “in the interests of Turkey that multiculturalism does not disappear and that all minorities in Turkey should be granted respect.” He expressed support for the conference and agreed to participate personally in it.

Religious leaders that the delegation met with included (1) Provost Friederika von Kirchbach, Deputy Bishop of the Protestant Church in Berlin – Brandenburg – Silesian Upper Lusatia and Chairperson of the Ecumenical Council for Berlin and Brandenburg, (2) His Excellency Dr. Matthias Heinrich, Auxiliary Bishop of the Berlin Archdiocese of the Catholic Church and (3) representatives of the American Jewish Committee, including Director Deidre Burger. During each meeting, the delegation described plans for the conference and elicited ideas. Bishop von Kirchbach and Bishop Heinrich in particular expressed strong support and promised that their communities would participate in the conference.

The last category of individuals the delegation saw was diplomats. They met with (1) Andreas Frygas from the Greek Embassy, (2) Avni Karslıoğlu, Turkey’s Ambassador to Germany, (3) Minas A. Hadjimichael, Cyprus’ Ambassador to Germany and (4) Philip Murphy, the United States Ambassador to Germany. During each meeting, religious freedom issues associated with religious minorities in Turkey were discussed as well as plans for the upcoming conference. Ambassador Hadjimichael expressed the view that the conference should review and analyze proposed changes to the Turkish constitution in the context of European principles and ideals. He embraced the view that any changes to the Turkish Constitution must reflect those ideals. Ambassador Karslıoğlu started the meeting by saying that he believes in “diversity and unity” and that the “right balance” must be struck between these principles. Without explicit reference, he invoked the doctrine of reciprocity and called for solutions based on the concept of “realpolitik” and bilateral discussions between the Greek and Turkish Governments. He concluded the meeting by saying “freedom should be given to all” based upon a “holistic approach to each group's problems.”

On the last day in Berlin – September 12, 2012 – the delegation visited Ambassador Philip Murphy, the United States Ambassador to Germany. He is a strong supporter of religious freedom and minority rights. He stated that the upcoming conference is “really important,” that he “wants to be on the side of minorities” and that religious freedom is “right in his wheel house.” He pledged the Embassy’s full support for the conference and volunteered to speak at it.
After concluding the meeting with Ambassador Murphy, the delegation traveled from Berlin to Istanbul. Upon arrival in Istanbul, Judge Bozonelis and the delegation participated in a meeting concerning the return of foundation properties with lawyers and advisors to the foundations includes Archon Laki Vingas, Fr. Joachim Billis and Patriarchal Attorney Yannis Ktistakis.

The next day, the delegation traveled to Ankara where they had important meetings with Diyanet President Mehmet Görmez and Deputy Prime Minister Bülent Arınç. Prior to meeting with Turkish officials, they met with Jess Bailey, Charge d’Affaires of the United States Embassy in Turkey at his official residence and reviewed issues of concern to religious minorities and the upcoming conference. Commander Limberakis expressed appreciation for the Embassy’s past support for the Order’s work promoting religious freedom.

After the meeting with Charge de’Affaires Bailey, they traveled to the Diyanet or Presidency of Religious Affairs for the meeting with President Görmez, who is considered the leading muslim cleric in Turkey. In July, President Görmez visited the Patriarchate and while there expressed support for the reopening of Halki. The meeting received extensive press coverage with at least twenty five reporters and numerous cameramen and photographers present for the initial remarks made by President Görmez and Commander Limberakis.

President Görmez opened the meeting by expressing his sadness and condolences over the death of the United States Ambassador to Libya, Chris Stevens and three employees. He stated that “no matter how provocative the movie [(i.e., the movie posted on You Tube mocking the Prophet Muhammad)], it is not an excuse for violent acts” and that you “cannot explain such acts with human or Islamic reason.” He further said that “provocative acts do not belong with freedom of expression” and that “people of all cultures should live together in peace and comfort.” Commander Limberakis responded by thanking the President for receiving the Archons and expressing gratitude for the President’s support for the reopening of Halki. He then thanked the President for extending condolences for the “horrific acts” in Libya that cost four lives. He further said that the murders occurred on September 11, the anniversary of 9/11, when “innocents of all faiths – Christians, Jews, Muslims and non-believers – lost their lives.” He concluded his opening remarks by saying that “the connection of Orthodox in America to the Ecumenical Patriarchate is a connection to our faith” and then said he was appreciative of the recent positive steps Prime Minister Erdoğan and other government officials have made with respect to minority rights.

President Görmez then talked about globalization and multiculturalism and stated that it is no longer appropriate to refer to people by the terms “minority” or “majority” and that he feels “offended” by the use of such terms. He addressed the issue of reciprocity and denied that it is a valid concept. He said “it is major mistake to use reciprocity in the fields of faith and culture” and that you “cannot deny Christians if Muslims are denied elsewhere.” Despite these facts, he said you cannot respond to “bad attitudes with bad attitudes.”

Commander Limberakis responded by pointing out the need to reopen Halki and that 41 years is too long to keep the seminary closed. The President agreed and in an obvious reference to the upcoming conference theme said the “important thing is not tearing down the physical walls” but “tearing down the walls in the minds and hearts of people.”

On the subject of confiscated properties and the recent law allowing for their return to minority foundations, the President said that it is “sacrilegious to use property owned by others” and that his office “exerted pressure for the recent changes in the law.” He further said that many properties owned by majority foundations have been confiscated too and have still not been returned. He expressed hope that the new Constitution deals with this issue.

Toward the end of meeting, he again expressed his disdain for use of the term “reciprocity” but he then said countries should abide by the principles of “equality” and “equal treatment,” effectively saying Muslims in other countries do not receive equal treatment. For example, he pointed out that Muslim communities living in Slavic countries face many of the same problems of the Ecumenical Patriarchate. He urged the Archons to focus on religious freedom issues “from a broader perspective” and to advocate for equal treatment of all people, not just for the Ecumenical Patriarchate.

After the meeting with the President, the delegation met for 1½ hours with Bülent Arınç, Deputy Prime Minister of Turkey. He said he was “saddened by the loss of life of the Ambassador and three employees,” expressed his condolences, and described the deaths as “open brutality.” He also said that “all faiths should be respected “and neither Islam nor humanity accepts the ending of life.” According to the Deputy Prime Minister, Turkey “wants all religious minorities to live in comfort and peace” and “minorities are no different than us, they are part of us.”

Commander Limberakis noted that the Deputy Prime Minister has been a strong advocate for the Ecumenical Patriarchate and thanked him for that support. In early 2011, he was the first Deputy Prime Minister to visit the Phanar since 1952. The Commander then raised with the Deputy Prime Minister specific issues of concern to the Ecumenical Patriarchate including (1) the rejection of five hierarchs’ applications for Turkish citizenship by the Turkish Government and (2) the continued closure of Halki. The Commander also said that the Archons were “grateful” for recent Government steps to return properties to minority foundations.

In response to these comments, the Deputy Prime Minister went into an extended and detailed response touching on a number of issues. He said that discussions about reopening Halki had gone on “far too long” and recognized that “most of the demands [of religious minorities] were rightful.” However, he went to say that most demands “have not been met because of political and legal considerations.”

He concluded by saying the Government is aware of incidents in 1955 and 1964, but that “these sad incidents remain in the past” and that Turkey is a different country today. He invited people who left Turkey because of those incidents to return to Turkey where he said “they will be treated with respect.”

On the last day of the trip – Friday, September 14, 2012 – the delegation attended the Divine Liturgy at the Patriarchal Cathedral of St. George to celebrate the Exaltation of the Holy Cross. After the liturgy, the delegation went to a meeting with Egemen Bağış, Minister of EU Affairs and Turkey’s chief negotiator in accession talks with the European Union. An Archon delegation first met Minister Bağış in 2007 in Ankara when he was Vice Chairman of the AK Party. Minister Bağış noted that “things are much better” since that time.

Commander Limberakis opened the meeting by saying that a “crime committed in the name of religion is a crime against religion” (alluding to the Bosporus Declaration of His All-Holiness Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew) and that “religious freedom is a fundamental human right that cannot be compromised.” He thanked the Minister for supporting the rights of the Ecumenical Patriarchate. He then condemned the anti-Islamic movie that caused recent riots and he condemned disrespect against all religions. The Minister responded by saying the person who made the movie has a “sick mind.”

He went on to say that he fully supports the reopening of Halki along with Prime Minister Erdoğan. But he said that before Halki is reopened “the Government must show it received something in exchange.” He said Prime Minister Erdoğan and Prime Minister Samaras should “cut a deal” when they meet later in the fall. He denied this was “reciprocity” but instead called it “mutual gestures.”

Father Karloutsos said hopefully both prime ministers will have “the glory of being responsible for Halki being reopened.”

After the meeting with Minister Bağış, the delegation met with representatives of minority communities, including Armenians, Syriacs, Jews, Protestants, Catholics, Alevi Muslims and Greek Orthodox. Minority representatives exchanged ideas for the upcoming conference with the Archon delegation. After that meeting, the Conference Planning Committee was able to further refine the program. The Conference focus will be on (1) the concept of equality from a legal, religious, political and ethical perspective and (2) the proposed new constitution.

The trip proved to be invaluable with respect to conference planning. The 2013 International Religious Freedom Conference will be an historic one bringing together scholars, politicians, diplomats, journalists, religious leaders and members of minority communities. In addition, the meetings with Turkish Government officials highlighted the fact that the principles of equal treatment and reciprocity are an important component of any debate on the rights of religious minorities in Turkey. Those principles will be addressed in detail at the 2013 International Religious Freedom Conference. All Archons and their families should plan to attend the conference during the first week of December 2013.
INTERNATIONAL RELIGIOUS FREEDOM:
A Human Right, A National Security Issue, A Foreign Policy Priority

By Denis McDonough, Deputy National Security Advisor

As Americans, we draw strength from the fact that freedom of religion, freedom of speech, and freedom of assembly are among first rights protected in our Constitution’s Bill of Rights. And we are not alone in cherishing these rights. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights recognizes that every person, in every corner of the globe, has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion. This includes the freedom of every person to change his or her religion or beliefs, and -- either alone or in community with others, publicly or privately -- to manifest his or her religion or belief in teaching, practice, worship and observance.

Yet far too many people, in far too many places around the world, still live without the protection of these fundamental freedoms. Yesterday, the Department of State released its annual report on the state of international religious freedom around the world, which documents that in nearly half of the world’s countries, governments either abuse religious minorities or fail to intervene in societal abuse. The report describes how, in many countries, individuals live under oppressive laws restricting their religious practice or attire, or in fear that they will be targeted by blasphemy, apostasy, and dissent laws. Repressive governments use these laws to curb their citizens’ religious freedom, and imprison them for their beliefs. This abuse concerns us not just because of what it means on a personal level for millions of individuals around the world, but also because religious freedom is a key feature of stable, secure and peaceful societies.

As Secretary Clinton noted in her remarks yesterday at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, right now many countries with diverse faith communities are in the process of navigating transitions toward democracy. The United States will continue to urge transitioning countries – like Egypt – to recognize faith diversity as a source of strength, and to embrace the promotion and protection of religious freedom as part of the foundation for building a stable, prosperous, and peaceful future. History bears us out in demonstrating that a lack of religious freedom weakens social cohesion and alienates citizens from their government, fomenting internal unrest, breeding extremism, and inhibiting national unity and progress.

More generally, the United States will continue to make the promotion of international religious freedom a key national security and foreign policy priority for the United States, to advocate forcefully for these issues publically and privately, in both multilateral and bilateral settings. An example of our success comes from the United Nations Human Rights Council, where we worked closely with the Organization of Islamic Cooperation to pass Resolution 16/18 on “Combating Intolerance, Negative Stereotyping and Stigmatization of, and Discrimination, Incitement to Violence and Violence Against, Persons Based on Religion or Belief” which focuses on concrete, positive steps that states can take to combat religious intolerance rather than relying on “anti-blasphemy measures” that are inconsistent with freedom of expression. After it passed, we then hosted subject matter representatives from 26 governments and four international organizations in Washington to begin discussion on implementation. As for our bilateral efforts, these are focused both on the countries designated by the Secretary of State as Country of Particular Concern for particularly severe violations of religious freedom – Burma, China, Eritrea, Iran, North Korea, Saudi Arabia, Sudan and Uzbekistan – and on other countries struggling with this issue as well.

While these discussions are sometimes difficult, they are necessary. As the President’s 2012 Proclamation on Religious Freedom Day stated, this Administration will continue to stand with all who are denied the ability to choose, express, or live their faith freely, and we remain dedicated to protecting this universal human right and the vital role it plays in ensuring peace and stability for all nations.

While in Istanbul for the Halki Summit, Krista Tippett, a widely listened to public radio correspondent for the weekly show “On Being,” interviewed Mustafa Akyol, a Turkish columnist for Hurriyet Daily News. Their conversation is a wonderfully rich discussion, including histories of religious toleration and secularism in the Ottoman Empire, Ataturk’s Turkey, and policies of the recent AKP government. Akyol spends considerable time speaking, favorably, about His All-Holiness Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew, the Halki Seminary, and the Greek Orthodox Church and its community in Istanbul. Below are a few excerpts:

Akyol

Certainly the Ecumenical Patriarch, Bartholomew is actually an asset for Turkey. I respect him as a religious leader, a Christian leader. I think he is very wise and he’s, I think, very constructive when it comes to religious dialogue and international issues. I have great respect for the institution. Unfortunately, the Ecumenical Patriarchate has been demonized by some Turks in the 20th century — and not out of Islam most of the time, but out of nationalism.

Turkey’s political tensions with Greece, which were mostly focused on Cyprus, became a reason in Turkey to persecute or demonize the Greeks within Turkey. Although they were Turkish citizens, many people here perceived them as the fifth column of the neighboring Greece. And the fact that Turkish Muslims in Greece did not have full religious freedom became a reason to not give full religious freedom to our Greek citizens, including the Ecumenical Patriarchate.

So this was a vicious cycle that really traumatized Turkish Christians, partly Jews, in the 20th century. But actually in the new 21st century, we are moving away from that doomed legacy and AKP still has a lot of reasons to be criticized for on freedom of speech. One thing that the Erdogan government did was to get rid of some of these limitations on Turkish Christians and Jews.

Tippett

Another fascinating thing about Turkey is, as you say, I mean, you’ve written that Turkish identity is synonymous with Muslim-ness. But here we are also in what was, and still is, the center of Eastern Orthodox Christianity, 300 million Christians worldwide. We’re going to see Bartholomew, the Patriarch, later in the week. So Turkey is also an experiment in Muslim-Christian encounter.

I think Patriarch Bartholomew has said that he feels more openness within an Islamic government than he did with the secular government.

Exactly. Exactly. Because, while Turkey’s secularists did not like religion and religion included Christianity as well. So sometimes you see religious people standing together in the face of an authoritarian secularist regime, and that was the case in Turkey. There have been important Muslim religious leaders in Turkey who have defended the patriarchates or Turkish Jewish community against nationalists who demonize these groups, these minority groups. And I’m happy to see more and more of that. Of course, there are still steps to be taken.

Adopted on 6/20/2012
Governor Matthew Mead

Dr. Louis Roussalis, Tim Joannides and Stephan Pappas led the effort to secure this resolution. Under their leadership, the Archons will also pursue resolutions from the Wyoming legislature when it convenes the 2013 session in January.

The seminary still has not been opened.

The Halki Seminary, the important teaching institution of the Ecumenical Patriarchate, it should be opened. Why it is not still opened, I don’t know. But the problems are coming from Turkey’s educational laws. No private education is allowed in Turkey, everything has to be under state tutelage, including Islamic education, and so on. So there are problems coming from there. But Erdogan should do this reform as soon as possible. And show to the world that “New Turkey,” which is more democratic and more Muslim than the past, is also more free. There are some reasons to say, Yes, that’s the case. There are some still problems which, you know, make that answer not perfect. But I hope, my hope is that the Erdogan government will keep on reforming and those reforms will include reforms that will further help the Christians of Turkey.

Archon George Sfio, Award Committee chairman, said, “Archons Fountas and Halecky have exemplified tremendous stewardship of time, talent and resources in support of the Mother Church of Constantinople, the Orthodox Christian Church throughout the United States, and to the mission of the Order of Saint Andrew in which all Christians should be granted religious freedom rights. Our committee deemed it appropriate to recognize their efforts and name them as recipients of this prestigious Award in recognition of the extraordinary service exemplified by National Vice Commander Bouras.”

Dr. Anthony J. Limberakis, National Commander of the Order, stated, “These two men have been intimately involved in virtually all the major initiatives of the Archons for a quarter century. They have played major roles as organizers and participants in the groundbreaking International Archon Religious Freedom Symposium held in November 2010 at the European Parliament in Brussels, Belgium and are assisting in preparations for the 2013 Symposium slated to be held in Berlin. Their contributions of time, talent and treasure for the Ecumenical Patriarchate and the Order of Saint Andrew have earned them as worthy recipients of this prestigious Award. Axios! Axios! Axios!”

The Nicholas J. Bouras Award is presented annually to an individual who has demonstrated extraordinary and incomparable stewardship to the Order, enabling Archons to vigorously pursue securing religious freedom for the Mother Church of Constantinople. The Award is named after Nicholas J. Bouras, current National Vice Commander, who himself has demonstrated remarkable leadership as a faithful son of the Ecumenical Patriarchate. Archon George D. Behrakis was the recipient of the inaugural Bouras Award in 2011.

May Their Memory Be Eternal
Great Lent is a spiritual journey, an opportunity to return to the loving embrace of our heavenly Father. At this retreat we will have the opportunity to explore the biblical story of the Prodigal Son, the characters of the elder brother and father as they are depicted in Rembrandt’s famous painting The Return of the Prodigal Son and draw from the reflections of Henri Nouwen and our Church’s rich Tradition.”

–His Grace Bishop Sevastianos of Zela

His Grace Bishop Sevastianos of Zela led the ninth Archon Lenten Retreat on the theme “Homecoming”—a reflection on the scriptural narrative of the Prodigal Son. The retreat was held on March 30-31 at the Consistory (headquarters) of the Ukrainian Orthodox Church of the USA in Somerset, NJ.

His Grace addressed fifty participants at the two day retreat. Using as resources Rembrandt’s painting, Return of the Prodigal Son.
Son, Henri Nouwen’s book, The Return of the Prodigal Son, and the Orthodox Faith and Tradition, His Grace Bishop Sevastianos elaborated on how the characters of the two sons, the younger and older, can be found in each person, and how we need to become like the Father. His Grace emphasized that what the younger and older sons were running from, was the love of God, and entering into the joy of their Father (the Lord).

It was further discussed that it is harder to accept forgiveness and love than to offer them. That we need to allow God to find us and love us, but also to share in the life of God—to be in communion with Him and sit at His table. Finally, that we need to adhere the Lord’s saying to be compassionate and merciful as our Father in Heaven is merciful, loving and forgiving others unconditionally.

Archon Peter Skeadas, Committee Chairman on Spirituality, was the retreat’s organizer. Archons John Halecky, Jr. and James C. Fountas assisted in coordinating the event with the Ukrainian Center. In expressing the participants’ thanks to Bishop Sevastianos, National Commander Anthony J. Limberakis, M.D. said, “Every year, we are blessed to have a speaker who deepens our understanding of our holy Orthodox Christian faith. His Grace eloquently and effectively referenced important teachings from the Prodigal Son that we should implement with the ultimate goal of becoming more Christ-like in our daily lives. His use of the Rembrandt painting was as innovative as it was captivating.”

The weekend opened with a service of thanksgiving and welcoming remarks in the chapel offered by His Eminence Archbishop Antony of Ierapolis of the Ukrainian Orthodox Church in America. The following morning, Father Taras Chubenko celebrated the Divine Liturgy. Throughout the weekend, participants were blessed with the generous hospitality of the Ukrainian Center at the Consistory of the Ukrainian Orthodox Church of the USA (under the Ecumenical Patriarchate) in New Jersey. His Eminence Metropolitan Evangelos graced the participants by His attendance during lunch and the final session of the retreat and also addressed the gathering with spiritual exhortations.
Some 100 participants listened to updates, delivered by National Commander Dr. Anthony J. Limberakis, during his presentation on “The Ecumenical Patriarchate: The Quest for Religious Freedom.” Dr. Limberakis touched on developments from meetings with government officials and religious leaders in Warsaw during the Order’s ‘Religious Freedom Mission’ to the European Union. He also highlighted the historic visit of Vice President Joseph Biden to the Phanar, the International Archon Religious Freedom Conference in Brussels, Belgium, and developments surrounding President Barack Obama’s public call to reopen Halki Seminary. Later that morning, Dr. Anton C. Vrame, Director of the Department of Religious Education for the Greek Orthodox Archdiocese and Associate Professor at Holy Cross Greek Orthodox School of Theology, spoke on “Paschal Iconography: Pascha to Pentecost, Visions of Renewed Faith and Renewed Life” were the guest speakers. He focused on the images of the Resurrection and the Sundays after Easter, and explored the meaning and implications of the Resurrection for the Orthodox Christian. Dr. Vrame offered statements about faith, healing, and life and connected the Paschal season to the Sacrament of Baptism. In addition, Dr. Vrame explained the “visual language” of icons and how their details reveal the experience and teachings of the Church.

His Eminence Metropolitan Evangelos of New Jersey concluded the afternoon with his personal reflections on icons pertaining to the Paschal season and provided his perspective to conclude the day. The symposium was open to all Archons, their spouses, clergy and other Orthodox faithful and organized by Regional Commander Dr. Cary J. Limberakis.

Archon Kircos joins fellow Regional Commander Archon Mark D. Stavropoulos in serving the Archons of the Metropolis of Detroit.

"Archon Kircos has been an exceptional member of the Order of Saint Andrew offering his time, talent and treasure to his local parishes, the Metropolis of Detroit, and to the Greek Orthodox Archdiocese of America." National Commander Dr. Anthony J. Limberakis said. "His commitment to the Holy Mother Church of Constantinople is exemplary, and has demonstrated ongoing leadership in support of the sacred mission of the Order of Saint Andrew."

Archon Kircos, who was born in Florina Greece, came to Michigan as a two year old. He grew up in the Detroit area and graduated from the University of Michigan with a BBA. He became a CPA while working for the then named Coopers & Lybrand and left to join NYSE traded Handlerman Company. There he rose through the financial ranks to become Chief Financial Officer at age 34 and then President of a major division overseeing multinational operations. In an attempted turnaround situation, he served as CEO of Toronto based Quality Dino Entertainment, a NASDAQ traded company before a brief stint as the President of an NASDAQ traded company before a brief stint as the President of an internet based company in 2000-01.

After a reflection of what the future may hold, he decided to work “full time” in a business he jointly owned with his brother since 1981 - Sophia's Bakery, a wholesale bakery that produces pocket pita, Greek flat bread and pita chips for major food retailers and restaurants in the Midwest. This choice allowed him to devote more time to volunteer activities of the church. His service to administrative affairs of the church began when he was 23 years old on the parish council of St. George Greek Orthodox Church Southgate, Michigan where he was elected president at the age of 28 and has served almost continuously since that time as an officer or committee chair. His father, Angelo, has served there as a chanter since 1970. Archon Kircos has served as President of the Deaconess Senior Citizens Housing Corp for 22 of the last 30 years, a position he continues now. Deaconess is a low income HUD subsidized housing project sponsored by St. George Church. He also is a member of two other churches, Assumption Church in St. Clair Shores, Michigan and Sts. Constantine & Helen Church in Westland, Michigan where he currently serves on the Parish Council and as Chairman of two of its committees. Archon Kircos is a member of Leadership 100 as well as AHEPA Chapter 374. He is a member of the Metropolis of Detroit Metropolis council since 2002 and is Secretary/Treasurer of its Missions and Scholarship Endowment Fund. Archon Kircos also serves on the finance committee of the Archdiocesan Council as well as Chairman of the Planned Giving subcommittee.

His wife, Paula, teases him by saying Church committees are his “work” and the business is his “hobby”. They like to travel, having recently returned from an unforgettable Archon sponsored trip to the Holy Land and have two children, their twins David and Catherine who are now attending universities. They have lived in Grosse Pointe Michigan since their marriage in 1986 where Archon Kircos has served as a member of the city foundation for over 10 years.

A Battle Ensign that had flown over NATO Role 3 Medical Treatment Facility in Kandahar, Afghanistan, was personally escorted to Pasadena, encased, and presented to Dr. Patzakis in recognition of his support of the U.S. Navy, mentorship and friendship shown to the crew of the Navy Trauma center at the LAC+USC Medical Center.

Dr. Patzakis’ children, Michele, Theresa, John and Peter, also spoke very touchingly and humorously about their father. A video presentation depicting his early life and culmination as chairman of the department, was also shown that evening.

Dr. Patzakis, who received his B.A. and M.D. degrees from The Ohio State University, has been a principal investigator on 65 research studies made possible from more than 40 grants and gifts from private industry, foundations, and grateful patients. He has authored more than 160 scientific papers, abstracts and book chapters and has lectured throughout the United States and the world.

NEW YORK, NY

The Department of Religious Education in April published First Among Equals: The Ecumenical Patriarchate. This new zine is the newest in a series of materials that have been developed by the Department for parish religious education programs. First Among Equals was a collaborative project of the Department and the Order of St. Andrew. Each contributed their respective expertise and experience to produce this resource. Education is an important key to unlocking the many chains that prevent the Ecumenical Patriarchate from fulfilling its global mission of proclaiming the Gospel of Jesus Christ and shepherding the Orthodox Church.

Through the stewardship of Dr. Stephen and Dr. Anna Yallourakis of Kingsport, Tennessee, the Order of St. Andrew was also able to underwrite the production costs of the publication. Dr. Yallourakis chairs the Patriarchal Education Initiative Committee for the Archons. Dr. Yallourakis expressed the importance of the new publication saying, “The Ecumenical Patriarchate is the sacred holy land of Orthodoxy. We need to recognize the importance of educating the Orthodox faithful to gain an understanding of our spiritual, apostolic, and hierarchical heritage and to reorient ourselves to Constantinople as the center of Orthodoxy. Through education we gain knowledge and thus the passion that develops into action to preserve, protect, and defend the Ecumenical Patriarchate.”

First Among Equals presents history, theology, the present ministry of the His All-Holiness Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew, and the daily challenges the Ecumenical Patriarchate faces. It offers snapshots of Byzantine and Orthodox Church history, especially related to the role of the Ecumenical Patriarchate of Constantinople within the life of Christianity. It explains basic topics, such as the vestments of a bishop, but also looks at the organization of the global Orthodox Church. Filled with photos and written for an eighth or ninth grader, the zine will sometimes use language and imagery aimed at them, but all members of the community will find this piece informative and beneficial to broadening awareness about the Ecumenical Patriarchate.

“This fills an important gap in our religious education resources,” said Dr. Anton Vrame, Director of the Department of Religious Education. “Our resources focus mostly on the immediate world of the learner, the local parish, the local Metropolis. First Among Equals exposes them to the global Orthodox Church and the leadership of the Patriarchate.”

The Order of St. Andrew mailed a sample copy to all the clergy and religious education directors of the Archdiocese, all Archons, and the members of Leadership 100. Additional copies are available for purchase from the Department of Religious Education.

The Department of Religious Education is completing a teacher’s guide with lesson material. The Department also carries other products about the Ecumenical Patriarchate, including the “60 Minutes” DVD and A Brief Guide to the Ecumenical Patriarchate that parishes may also want to obtain.
For the last two decades, His All-Holiness Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew has led the way toward a more rigorous examination and responsible commitment of our relationship to creation as God’s gift, addressing climate change as a moral calling of the highest order. While his message has resonated deeply and globally with those working in public affairs, politics, policy-making, diplomacy, science, theology and journalism, the truth is that Orthodox Christians and parishes throughout the world have been the most reluctant and resistant to any related “conversion” or “transformation” experience. This has been a source of regret and frustration for His All-Holiness, who has repeatedly called for a “greening” of our clergy, parishes and seminaries.

The handbook compiled by Frederick Krueger is a direct and clear response to this call. Having worked for decades in leadership roles coordinating and connecting ecological concerns and religious principles, Mr. Krueger is the executive director of the Fellowship of the Transfiguration, an unparalleled organization here in the United States, spiritually affiliated to and endorsed by the Orthodox Episcopal Assembly of North America. OFT is a pan-Orthodox group seeking to relate the teachings of Orthodox Christian tradition and practice to current environmental needs and concerns in North America. The Fellowship supports conferences, workshops, retreats and publications. It seeks prayerfully to help Orthodox Christians and parishes grow in their understanding and experience of Christian teachings and practice on Creation, so that we all may contribute to more balanced ways of living and community amid current environmental challenges.

The handbook provides extraordinary insights into the theological foundations of environmental awareness and action, including mandates from the Bible and witnesses from the Fathers. It also offers invaluable information into the various dimensions of climate change, including energy, air and water pollution. However, most importantly, it contains practical guidelines for an ecologically conscious ministry by Orthodox Christians in the parish and in the home. There is also an anthology of articles by leading Orthodox thinkers on the subject, as well as official statements by Orthodox Churches. Finally, the book closes with liturgical and bibliographical resources.

The publication appears in honor of the 20th anniversary since the election of His All-Holiness Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew, whose foreword states: “This book is precisely what is needed in our parishes to encourage and guide our faithful to understand not only the theological and spiritual vision behind ecological awareness, but also the practical and tangible ways which can realistically and readily be adopted by all Orthodox Christians in larger and smaller parishes alike, in both more comfortable and struggling communities.”

This book should be on the shelves of every Orthodox Christian and every Orthodox parish.
On July 30, United States assistant Secretary of State Philip Gordon visited the holy monastery and theological school of Halki. In conversation with Metropolitan Epiphaphoros of Bursa, Mr. Gordon expressed the interest of the United States in the seminary’s re-opening. Furthermore, he conveyed Secretary of State Hillary Clinton’s warm greet-ings toward His All-Holiness Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew.

With the blessings of His Eminence Metropolitan Alexios of Atlanta, the theme for the Metropolis of Atlanta’s spring meeting was Religious Freedom. The activities during March 17–18 focused on the critical issue of religious freedom for the Ecumenical Patriarchate, featuring Dr. Jay A. Sekulow, chief counsel of the American Center for Law and Justice. A special forum, moderated by Dr. Manuel Tissura, was held at the Metropolis Chapel of the Archangel Michael where Dr. Andrew Ekonomou, Senior Council of the European Center for Law and Justice, fielded questions with along with Dr. Sekulow on issues surrounding the plight of the Mother Church of Constantinople.

On July 5, the President of Turkey’s Religious Affairs Directorate, Professor Mehmet Görmez, accompanied by Istanbul Chief Mufti Rahmi Yaran, visited the Phanar, where he was received by His All-Holiness. Prof. Görmez expressed support for the reopening the Theological School of Halki, saying that it is a fundamental right of non-Muslims living in Turkey to educate their own leaders and teachers.

On July 27, His All-Holiness met with Turkish President Abdullah Gül at a dinner (iftar) in Istanbul, where the issue of the peaceful co-existence of Muslims and non-Muslim citizens was highlighted. President Gül stated that Turkey “belongs to us all and we should live together respectfully and peacefully.” Other guests included the U.S. Consul General, other consuls, mayors, and religious leaders from Turkey and other countries.
